

Examples and suggestions for sacral spaces

Particularly in sacral objects, one must take painstaking care in the course of light planning. These spaces have their own atmosphere - which sometimes is veritably mystical. Too much emphasis on the mere aspect of light-engineering data can damage or even destroy the atmosphere and architecture of a sacral space. In buildings under monument conservation, a main priority is the minimisation of invasive procedures which affect the structural substance. In most cases, the lighting should not be in the foreground, but instead "blend in" to the setting as a whole. Nowadays, it is becoming increasingly significant that not only various forms of worship service take place along with the typical service during the liturgical year, but that church spaces are also utilised for concerts, readings, exhibitions and many other special events. Therefore, the answer to questions on forms one of the focal points of our work. In our Product search, you can, in the section ""Keyword Search"" have the corresponding light fixtures displayed by inputting the first letters of the international illuminants identifiers for energy-saving bulbs (i.e. TC or HIT – currently, the database only shows a selection of items in our product line.

These raised standards require adaptable lighting. If the lighting is closely associated with the architecture and furnishings of a building, yet the necessity has arisen to make this lighting more efficient and more up-to-date, one must also consider whether it is practical to modify the existing light fixtures.

Based on our many decades of experience in the area of restoration, we have this sensitivity and fine-tuned perception when it comes to dealing with historical buildings.

The use of up-to-date, multi-functional light fixtures is a task often faced, particularly in dealing with modern sacral structures. In this context, we can offer you the most diverse solutions and also further develop them to suit your requirements. Our spectrum of services is completed by our diverse chandelier types which can be custom-made for your church.
